FACING DEATH AT SKINWALKER RANCH

Paul Dale Roberts: Chantal Apodaca looks at me and asks…"are you scared?" I look at her and calmly said…"yes." What is there to be scared about at the Skinwalker Ranch? Lots of things, but before I talk about the 'scary incident', let's start from the beginning. The day is October 4, 2008, Saturday. The time is 0900 hours. At my door are HPI paranormal investigators Chantal Apodaca and Lisa Hanley. My local scouting missions can have up to 30 investigators attending, but when the distance is far, the scouting mission party can be very small. Well, this scouting mission is far, it's in Utah, past Salt Lake City, close to the towns of Vernal and Roosevelt. This scouting mission is the smallest one yet. Only two investigators show up at my door. I am thankful they are coming with me, because now I will have someone to talk to. I won't lose my mind on the long, long road to nowhere. Skinwalker Ranch is the paranormal Mecca for investigators like me. Chantal and Lisa have done their research and are very excited to go.

Let's look at the history of the Skinwalker Ranch. Skinwalker Ranch, also known as Sherman Ranch or Gorman Ranch, is a property located on approximately 480 acres (1.9 km2) southeast of Ballard, Utah that is allegedly the site of paranormal and UFO-related activities. Its name is taken from the skin-walker of Native American legend.

Claims about the ranch first appeared in the Salt Lake City, Utah Deseret News, and later in the alternative weekly Las Vegas Mercury as a series of articles by journalist George Knapp. These early stories detailed the claims that a family that had recently purchased and occupied the property experienced an array of inexplicable and frightening events.

Knapp and co-author Colm Kelleher subsequently authored a book in which they describe the ranch being acquired by the National Institute for Discovery Science (NIDSci) to study anecdotal sightings of UFOs, bigfoot-like creatures, crop circles, glowing orbs and poltergeist activity reported by its former owners. Special Note: It is rumored that the NIDS was formerly the O.S.I.R. (The Office of Scientific Investigation and Research) made famous by the TV series Psi-Factor hosted by Dan Ankroyd.

The ranch, located in west Uintah County bordering the Ute Indian Reservation, was popularly dubbed the "UFO ranch" due to its ostensible 50-year history of odd events said to have taken place there. Knapp and Kelleher cite the 1974 book The Utah UFO Display: A Scientist's Report by Frank Salisbury and Joseph "Junior" Hicks, which details an earlier investigation into alleged UFO sightings in the Uintah County region, as partial confirmation of their account. According to Kelleher and Knapp, they saw or investigated evidence of close to 100 incidents that include vanishing and mutilated cattle, sightings of unidentified flying objects or orbs, large animals with piercing yellow eyes that they say were not injured when struck by bullets, and invisible objects emitting destructive magnetic fields. Among those involved were retired Army Colonel John B. Alexander who characterized the NIDSci effort as an attempt to get hard data using a "standard scientific approach". However, the investigators admitted to "difficulty obtaining evidence consistent with scientific publication." Cattle mutilations have been part of the folklore of the surrounding area for decades, but NIDSci founder Robert Bigelow's purchase of the ranch and investigation funding was reportedly the result of his being convinced by stories of mutilations that included tales of strange lights and unusual impressions made in grass and soil told by the family of former ranch owner Terry Sherman.

In 1996, skeptic James Randi awarded Bigelow a Pigasus Award for funding purchase of the property for what he termed a "useless study" of "a 'haunted ranch' in Utah".

A film, titled Skinwalker Ranch, was released in 2013, and is very loosely based on the folklore behind the ranch.

I have been to many haunted locations from Stonehenge to the Tower of London to the Bridge over River Kwai in Thailand, but never have I been to a location that has so many stories of paranormal phenomenon. I have been to countries that have unusual paranormal phenomenon like Honduras, Belize, El Salvador, Panama, Haiti, the Dominican Republic, Venezuela, but for some reason the stories from Skinwalker Ranch will stay in my mind. Now let's talk about this adventure.

The stories that stay in my mind about the Skinwalker Ranch are the following. 1. The Gorman family that lived on this ranch, came across a bulletproof wolf that was chewing on the leg of one of their calves. They shot at this wolf several times and it merely shrugged off the bullets and walked away. 2. The Gorman family saw a RV drive away into the hillside and later morph into a UFO and fly off in the night sky. 3. A NIC scientist witnessed a portal open-up in the sky and a Bigfoot creature came out of the portal and ran off into the woods. 4. There has been Shadow People, poltergeist activity at this ranch. So, you can see I am anxious to check it out myself.

Alejandro Guzman of Enterprise Rent-a-car has my car waiting. It's a 2008 Pontiac G-5 with satellite radio. This car saved our lives and to mark this car into history, the license plate number is 6FBB672. Chantal and I, worked on a nickname for this car. Chantal came up with The Portal, then Portal Potty and finally Portal Wheels. I took her play on names and simply called it The Rift. The Rift, a temporary HPI vehicle for this mission, will get us to the Skinwalker Ranch and back. Alejandro was fascinated with my ghost hunting stories and couldn't wait until I return, to give him a report on my findings.

Chantal, Lisa and I, all piled up in The Rift and looked forward to making paranormal history... well, we hope. When you are driving over 500 miles, how do you entertain yourself. By singing along to songs like Sexy Back – Justin Timberlake, All Summer Long- Kid Rock, Sweet Home Alabama – Lynyrd Skynyrd, Love Train/Backstabber – Ojays. Chantal enjoyed the Backstabber song, because she was pretending to stick a knife into my back and turning it each time the Ojays said the word 'backstabbers'.

During the trip to Skinwalker, Lisa Hanley tells us how she lived in a home in Galt, it was an old remodeled farmhouse. She remembers being in bed sleeping and awoke abruptly. The air in the room turned cold. She then saw a man in the mirror, he was wearing a big black hat, black trenchcoat and had no facial features. She could distinctly see the full body apparition in the mirror from 15 feet away. That was the most scariest moment in this house, other times she has seen shadows dart about here and there. She has heard distinct whispering, when she laid her head on the pillow. On this trip, Lisa and Chantal were like my guardian angels, always on the look-out for danger, like when they saw a drunk driver on the road. Or when we were driving through the endless desert road in Nevada, we saw a strange old station wagon. There were animal teeth on strings. The animal teeth on strings were strewn all around the windows of the car. Yes, he had animal teeth as decorations for the interior of his car. The first thing that came out of all our mouths was 'serial killer'? During our long trip on that road, we made several stops at places like I-80 Smokeshop and Campground (that would remind you of the gas station stop in the movie 'Rest Stop'). Other places were Salt Flats Café and Jazzy's Texaco Foodmart. Jazzy's was a fun stop, two gorgeous women worked there and were fascinated by our ghosthunting stories. We took pictures with these high-strung fun girls. With all of the stops we were making, when we would get back on the road again, there was the serial killer station wagon car in front of us. When we passed the serial killer station wagon, the driver methodically turned his head and looked at us. Yeah, we were creeped out, so we tried to liven things a bit and put in Sheryl Crowe's All I Wanna Do song. We were back to normal for a while, until we made another stop, we got back on the road again and guess who we were passing by again? Yep, the serial killer stationwagon and Chantal and Lisa were screaming at the top of their lungs. That was the last time we saw the serial killer stationwagon. When the serial killer station wagon finally faded from our minds, I learned that Lisa Hanley's son named Thomas Hanley is a rap singer and Lisa played one of his CDs. To my amazement, Thomas was a very good singer and I usually don't listen to rap music. From what I can tell, Thomas has potential of going far in the entertainment business.

As we reached Utah, the thunderstorm began. The drive at times became unbearable, but we still had the music playing and doing sing-a-longs. We made more stops on the way, just to stretch and talk with the locals. One local we talked to was Connie. Connie never heard of the Skinwalker Ranch, but she did have a ghost story. Connie said that she lived in a home in Utah. In this home, a man committed suicide by hanging himself in the basement. On certain nights, she felt an entity lay on top of her, she would walk into a room and feel his presence. She would hear screeching and screams from the basement. The home was 30 years old and she lived in the home for 16 years. It didn't help when her daughter-in-law moved in. Her daughter-in-law was a Wiccan, she would perform rituals of the black arts in her home. Entities were seen going inside pictures and mirrors. The family of this home, including Connie always felt drained. It was like their life-force or energy was taken from them. Connie also feels she may be a sensitive, because she can predict the deaths of people that she is close to. Connie finally had enough of her daughter-in-law and expelled her from the house. Connie smudged the home with white sage, the haunting activity finally ceased. Connie told us two more unusual paranormal stories, she claims she was actually visited by the late Margaux Hemingway. Margaux's apparition appeared to her and discussed depression. Connie also on another night had a vision of a woman with slit wrists appearing to her and just staring at her.

Skinwalker Ranch

When we drove through Salt Lake City, we were amazed at the beauty of this city. Salt Lake City has much to offer with the sites of Temple Square, the Tabernacle, Olympic Cauldron Park and much more.

When we reached Salt Lake City, we learned that the Skinwalker Ranch (near the towns of Roosevelt and Vernal in the Uintah Basin was 2 hours or 2 ½ hours away on Highway 40. When I got this news, I almost fainted. I already drove forever into eternity with Lisa helping me to drive. The weather didn't look good, there is lightning everywhere. It's now midnight, I feel the fatigue setting in. I ask my investigators if they are ready to get a hotel and try again tomorrow. Lisa says if the Sci Fi Channel's Destination Truth paranormal team can endure the hardships that they do in various jungles, swamps in the world to seek out the truth, then we can endure the hard rains of Utah. I looked at Chantal and say: "Do you feel the same way Chantal?" Chantal: "Yes, Paul, we came too far to stop now." I look at Lisa and Chantal and said they are both heroic paranormal pioneer scouts that have the courage and heart of a tiger. So be it, let's get back into The Rift and trek ahead for our destination.

For California paranormal investigators, if you plan to investigate the Skinwalker Ranch, I suggest you drive first to Salt Lake City, get a hotel, rest up and then in the morning head over to Skinwalker Ranch, do not attempt to drive all the way to the Skinwalker Ranch. In fact, Utah even has signs indicating they do not want fatigued drivers on their freeways.

The thunderstorm became intense, but I kept driving, there were times when I was driving at 5 mph. The music stopped, everyone was concentrating. You could cut the tension inside my car with a knife. Lisa looked petrified and terrified, Chantal no longer had a smile on her face. I asked, should I go back? Chantal and Lisa in unison…."no". Driving through a thunderstorm through canyon roads was extremely dangerous and treacherous, many people have lost their lives on their way to the Uintah Basin at night (according to locals). The drive seemed to go on forever, my head was spinning with thoughts of disaster. Everything seemed to move in slow motion. Even though the rain was beating down upon The Rift, everything seemed unusually silent and surreal, it was like we were experiencing the Oz Factor. I could see the fright in the eyes of Chantal and Lisa. I can't describe how terrifying the drive became, but there was no way of going back now, we had to move forward. I remember Shannon 'Ms. Macabre' McCabe's call earlier this morning and how she was wishing us luck on this investigation. I remember Shannon's laughter as I called her Dana Scully and she called me Fox Mulder. Shannon and I, always communicate on the cell phone and I always brief her about my unusual investigations. I have been on some treacherous investigations, but this must have been the worse, and remembering the calming effect of Shannon's laughter on the cell phone brought me back to normalcy. I trekked on, I asked the spiritual entities that look over my life to be with me and get me to my destination in safety.

Finally, we reach the Uintah Basin, we all clap in unison. We have made it and we were in all in one piece. We all just sat inside the car for a long while in silence, perhaps all of us were saying silent prayers. After the silence, we did the next hardest thing, getting Chantal's gigantic tent up. Her tent is called '3 Room Cottage Cabin'. As the three of us are placing this tent up, we are all falling in the mud. At one point of time, I fall into the mud face down. I was wondering…does Destination Truth ever experience what we were experiencing, I fantasized about a 5-Star Hotel in Tahiti. It took about an hour to get the tent up in the hard rains of Utah.

We had a meeting inside the tent, we would all pull shifts watching the night skies. I would take the first shift. The 'observer' of the team would be equipped with a whistle. If we were to see anything unusual, the observer blows the whistle to awaken the rest of the team.

Equipment being used for this investigation: Digital Video Camera (borrowed from Shannon McCabe). Only used Shannon's camera the next day. I decided not to use it this evening because of the rain. Regular 35 mm camera. Digital camera. Digital Audio Recorder. Binoculars. Laser pin lights (for signal communication to UFOs), 2 high powered flashlights (for setting up base camp and signal communication to UFOs).

During this night, we didn't sleep well, 15 minutes of sleep here, 15 minutes of sleep there. During one point of the evening, we all hear an unusual animal cry, it was like a loud screeching sound and then ends with 'wup, wup'. We heard the sound two times, the sound of... eeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee... wup, wup. I would love to consult with a zoologist and see if the zoologist is able to identify this animal sound. Listening to my recorder, it only picked up the sound of hard rain. The unusual animal sounds were heard at 3:24am. At 4:12am, Chantal was on watch, I was up and about again and we both saw a lightning explosion that later turned into the shape of a large ball, the first words out of my mouth was…"what the f?" I grabbed Chantal's whistle and blew it and Lisa came out, the lightning explosion was no longer visible.

It was an incredible sight. I can see how perhaps the Ute Indians may see this as a portal. I believe that I witnessed 'ball lightning', a phenomenon that probably can be seen in states with severe weather patterns like Texas and Louisiana. It came out of nowhere and there was no way I was able to photograph this spectacular display of natural electricity.

With the thunderstorm continuing, clouds in the sky, this would be a poor night to observe paranormal phenomenon, but the ball lightning and the strange animal sound was very enticing and I wanted to go with another investigation the next evening. When the sun started to rise, Lisa came out of the tent sneezing and coughing. The storm caused her to become deathly ill. I knew I had to get Lisa and Chantal home. Lisa's children called on my cell and were concerned about the bug she caught and did not want to see their mother catch pneumonia. I looked at Lisa and Chantal and said... "let's pack it up and head back to California, we did our best."

We all walked into Denny's Restaurant caked with mud. All of the locals stared at us. We looked like Rob Zombie's Devils Rejects as we walked towards the bathrooms to clean up and change out of our muddy clothes. We came out of the restrooms refreshed and I smiled at the waitress and said... "have a nice day."

As we were driving through Salt Lake City, Chantal tells me to stop at the Great Salt Lake. Both Chantal and Lisa run to the water's edge, they touch the water, they touch the salt, they say a few prayers. I later learn that they both had a spiritual experience at the Uintah Basin. They both felt an enlightening, a spiritual awareness, they both feel more in tune with their families and friends. They both felt compelled to touch the water and the healing salts of the Great Salt Lake. They asked me what I felt. I told them, I felt I needed another adventure, I didn't get the spiritual awakening that they did.

The area of the lake we went to we saw an unusual building. The building was used in a 1962 movie called Carnival of Souls. I even met a tourist from Michigan that said he will check out the HPI branch office in Michigan. We all got back into the The Rift and headed on 80 West to California. I jammed up 'Born on the Bayou by Creedence Clearwater Revival'.

Chantal was still looking for the serial killer stationwagon. The cell phone rings twice. The first call is Christine B of KFOK – Georgetown Radio Show 'World of the Paranormal', she asks how we are doing, I tell her we all survived. Christine and I did a radio show on the way up to Skinwalker Ranch and she was able to talk to me, Chantal & Lisa. Christine said the radio show was a blast as we discussed many details of the Skinwalker Ranch. The second call was from Dana Scully aka Shannon McCabe. Shannon was relieved we all survived this paranormal ordeal, she asked how much further we had to go, I say.. "oh... we are merely 245 miles from Reno." Shannon says... "dear god, how do you do it Paul?" I answer: "My curiosity is too great Shan, I need to know... the truth." There was one phone call I was hoping would come and didn't. Last week, I was offered by Cartoon Network to be the technical consultant for their upcoming pilot 'After School Paranormal', two producers for this pilot are involved with Sci Fi Channel's Destination Truth. The call to confirm that I would do the pilot did not come, so I am left on pins and needles. Zig... if you read this, call me and let me know one way or another, thanks man.

Note: Somewhere in the Utah landscape, I hid some items that were given to me by a woman that claims she can perform out-of-body projection and remote viewing. The items she had me hide in the Utah landscape are items that she is attached to. She feels she can describe the landscape, because either she will remote view the landscape or actually astral project herself to the location. I will be eager to hear from her, as she will attempt to describe the landscape. I took pictures of the landscape to compare with her description. Skinwalker Ranch is behind me now... but, there will be more investigations and I will be ready.

CORRECTION: On the cover it says HPI was at Uinta Basin in 1992. The year was actually 2008. Sorry about that, I had 1992 stuck in my brain.

Lake Havasu City in Arizona is considered haunted, with the London Bridge being the epicenter of local paranormal legends. Since being transported from England and rebuilt in 1971, reports suggest that the bridge brought centuries of British history, violence, and spirits with it. Tourists that have visited the bridge say that they feel a lot of dark energy.

Rebuilt in 1971, this historic landmark is believed to be haunted by multiple spirits from its time in London, including a London bobby and a woman in black. The metal for the lamp posts on the bridge is rumored to be made from melted-down cannons of Napoleon Bonaparte's army. Despite the macabre history of severed heads and violent deaths attached to the original structure, some believe the spirits visiting the Arizona location are friendly, while other paranormal investigators find the bridge unsettling. Some investigators have felt nauseated while on the bridge. Other investigators have lost vertigo while on the bridge and when they are away from the bridge, they feel normal again. Some theorists and paranormal investigators suggest that the spirit of Jack the Ripper is attached to the bridge, as many of his crimes occurred near the original structure in London. Visitors have reported hearing screaming voices coming from underneath the bridge and in the closed maintenance tunnels. The submerged ghost town of Liverpool Landing lies underneath the waters of Lake Havasu. Some drivers and pedestrians report feeling followed by dark shadows while crossing the bridge.

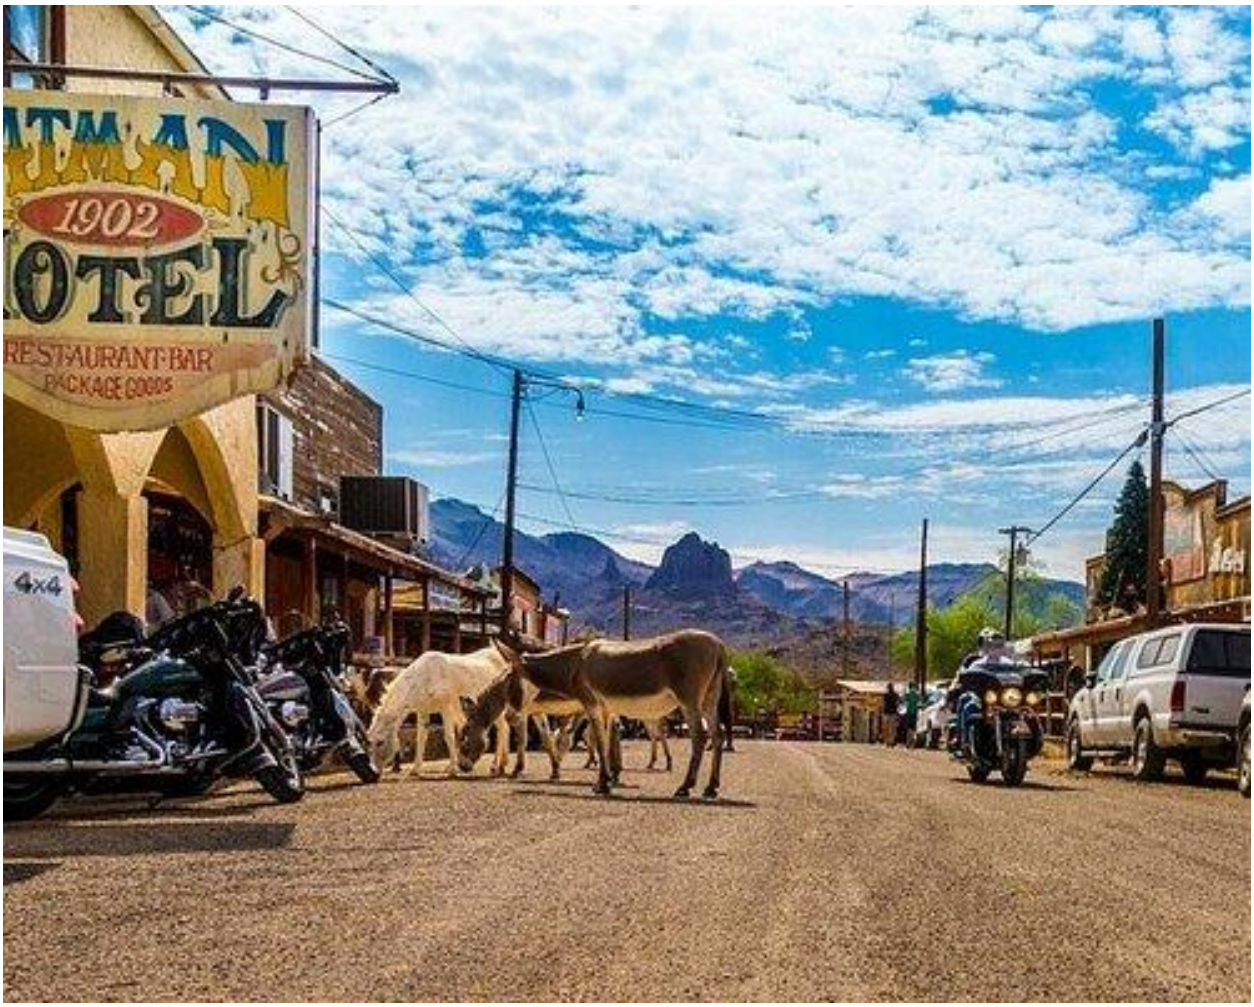
The London Bridge Specters:
As mentioned above, the most prominent specters on this bridge is a "woman in black" who is decked out in Victorian clothing. She will walk alongside the bridge and then with a blink of the eye, she will leap off the bridge. Then afterwards a "Bobby" aka London Policeman acts like he is looking for the woman in black. Other times people will see the Bobby who acts like he is patrolling the bridge. Blood-curdling screams and disembodied voices have been reported coming from the tunnels and under the structure. Adding to the eerie atmosphere, the ruins of a "ghost town," known as Liverpool Landing, lie submerged beneath the water in the lake.

Crack in the Mountain Trail:
Many hikers claim that they have seen a ghostly hiker who will appear out of nowhere, act like he is hiking and then vanish into thin air. One hiker said he encountered the Crack in the Mountain Hiker and the entity whispered in his ear..."watch your step!" About 15 feet away was a rattlesnake that looked like it was ready to strike. What is amazing, the same thing happened to me. I had a group of investigators with me, and we were investigating an abandoned high school, I captured an EVP that said: "watch your step" and 5 feet in front of me was a huge rattlesnake. My investigators and I, ran from that area as quickly as possible. I'm not scared of ghosts, but I am sure as heck, scared of rattlesnakes! It appears that some ghosts have good intentions and want to make sure you are safe. I am very thankful to that ghost in Texas.



Oatman, Arizona (Ghost Town)

One hour, down the road is Oatman, Arizona, a historic gold-mining ghost town along Route 66. This ghost town is famous for paranormal activity centered around the Oatman Hotel. Visitors and staff frequently report disembodied whispering, random toilet flushing, self-moving objects, and ghostly encounters from lingering spirits. The town's haunted reputation is tied to its gold-rush history and legendary visitors. Reported paranormal activity includes The Hollywood Honeymooners. The second floor of the hotel features the famous room where Clark Gable and Carole Lombard supposedly stayed after their 1939 wedding in nearby Kingman, Arizona. Visitors often report hearing mysterious whispering and laughing in this room when it is completely empty. One of the most infamous resident spirits is "Oatie," an Irish miner who allegedly drank himself to death at the hotel. He is known as a mischievous poltergeist who enjoys playing the bagpipes, opening windows in locked rooms, and pulling sheets off display beds. The ghost of a former chambermaid is said to haunt the second floor, leaving physical imprints of her body in the dust. Downstairs, patrons have reported phenomena such as money lifting off the bar, glasses flying through the air, and lights turning on and off on their own. Today, the Oatman Hotel no longer operates as an overnight accommodation but serves as a museum, restaurant, and tourist attraction where you can explore the haunted upper levels. Some tourists claim that they have seen the ghost of Olive Oatman. The town itself takes its name from Olive Oatman, who was captured by the Tolkepaya (Western Yavapai) in 1851. After spending several years living with the Mojave people (during which she received a traditional blue facial tattoo), she was traded back to American settlers in 1856 near what is now Yuma, Arizona, becoming a massive symbol of American frontier survival. The famous gunslinger Wyatt Earp has visited Oatman, Arizona. Historians note that he frequently traveled to and from the settlements of northwestern Arizona, which would have naturally taken him through Oatman and Goldroad on the fledgling roads that eventually became the famous Route 66.

A Black Panther Encounter:
The North York Moors is incredibly rich in ghostly legends and paranormal lore. With its desolate landscapes, ancient ruins, and dramatic coastal cliffs, the region is legendary for tales of phantom coaches, restless spirits, and the famous "black dog" apparitions. Carl Langley from Orlando, Florida went hiking at the North York Moors and encountered a large black panther walking in the fields. Carl and his friend remained still, hoping not to be seen by the large cat. The panther at some point of time does see them and starts walking towards them. Carl claims that the air started becoming very hazy, as if there were dust particles in the air. Carl says there was no dust on the ground and couldn't understand why things got so hazy. Carl and his friend slowly started backing up and preparing to run to their vehicle, when the haziness disappeared and there was no panther in sight. It's noted that many paranormal researchers believe that the black panthers of England may be interdimensional entities. Carl and his friend's encounter appeared to be an interdimensional incident.

The Phantom Black Dogs (Gytrash):
Specific haunted hotspots and myths across the moors include The "Black Dogs" (Gytrash). The desolate moorland roads are famous for legends of phantom black dogs with glowing eyes. Encounters with these creatures are traditionally seen as omens of doom or as guides for lost travelers. Let's take a better look at the Black Dogs known as the Gytrash. The Gytrash (or Guytrash) is a legendary spectral creature from Northern English folklore, usually described as a large, shaggy black dog with glowing eyes. It is a famous regional type of "black dog" or hellhound. Gytrash is mostly seen as a black dog, but it's actually a shapeshifter. Depending on the local lore, it can also manifest as a horse, mule, or even an evil cow. In Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, it is sometimes called a Shagfoal and takes the form of a spectral mule or donkey with eyes like burning coals. Sightings usually happen on solitary, lonely roads at night. Encounters have dual outcomes; the creature is known to lead travelers astray and get them hopelessly lost, but it can also act benevolently, guiding them back to the correct path.

The Phantom Coach:
Locals refer the carriage as "The Phantom Coach of the Moors". The story is a chilling fixture of Northern English folklore. As the legend goes, the phantom carriage is described as a spectral coach, sometimes drawn by headless horses and driven by a ghostly coachman, that thunders across the remote moors on dark, stormy nights. In British tradition, this apparition is widely considered an omen of death and horrible misfortune. Locals and travelers crossing the bleak, isolated moorlands in northern England, such as the North York Moors and Dartmoor, have reported hearing the distant, frantic gallop of horses and the clatter of carriage wheels before a glowing, supernatural vehicle materializes out of the fog. Sightings of the spectral carriage—sometimes carrying the restless dead—are said to portend a dark future or a tragic passing in the area. Similar phantom coaches are reported across the UK, including a fiery carriage in Norfolk and a spectral mail coach in Enfield. In Coventry, a popular pub named "The Phantom Coach" was built over a marshy pond where an actual 19th-century carriage is said to have crashed.

Hob Hole (Goathland):
In Northern English folklore, a hob is a mischievous, dwarf-like household spirit known for doing farm chores in secret, but who can cause chaos if offended. They were typically described as short, hairy, naked men who lived in fields, farm buildings, or natural coastal caves. The sprite of Hob Hole (located near Goathland and Runswick Bay in the North York Moors) is one of the region's most famous hobs. Local people believed the Hob Hole sprite had the ability to cure whooping cough (historically called "kink-cough"). Mothers would bring their sick children to the damp coastal cave at low tide and recite a specific rhyme: "Hob Hole Hob, My bairn's gotten t'kink cough, Tak it off, Tak it off." To keep a hob helpful, you had to leave out offerings of cream and never spy on them. Hobs strictly despised clothing. Offering them new clothes, even as a polite gift was considered a great insult that would cause them to leave the farm or cave permanently. Much like the ancient "little people" of the hills, the name "Hob" was often used because of an old superstition against calling supernatural beings by their real names.

Whorlton Castle:
The Grey Lady is a popular apparition that is often seen walking across the site. Then we have "The Guards". The Guards are two apparitions dressed up as guards and they appear to be keeping watch. Visitors have reported hearing unearthly noises, such as screaming, and experiencing intense feelings of dread or being watched. Tourists and locals have seen the Blue Boy, a little boy dressed in blue that is sometimes playing with a red ball or running around down a hall. Then there is a ghost known as "The Cauld Lad aka Roger Skelton. Reports have included the scent of decaying flesh, historically attributed to the site's connection to leprosy in the 1600s. A tourist once saw the ghost known as The Leper. The Leper is an old man, that walks around with a hunchback and blisters all over his face and arms. A very frightful entity. If you see this entity and scream, it will vanish immediately. Glaisdale & Danby are villages nestled in the moors, and they have their own legends of witchcraft, mysterious standing stones, and the lingering spirits of former residents.

UFOs!
UFOs and strange, glowing phenomena are frequently reported in and around the North York Moors. The broader North Yorkshire region is actually considered one of the UK’s primary UFO hotspots.

Thunder Bay has a rich, gritty history dating back to the fur trade and silver mining, making it a hotspot for local ghost stories and paranormal legends. Locals and paranormal groups frequently report haunted hotels, spectral figures on hiking trails, and phantom ships across the region.

Some of the most notable haunted spots in and around Thunder Bay include:

The Prince Arthur Hotel:
"Ol' Harvey" in Room 203. Guests and staff report that a well-to-do man who lived in Room 203 haunts the second floor, often signaled by the smell of cigar smoke. According to local lore, when staff took down photos of "Harvey" in Room 203, the room mysteriously flooded, only stopping when the photos were replaced. Former employees have reported seeing apparitions, including a little boy from the early 1900s, a woman in a wedding dress, and a 1950s-era bus boy in the elevator. The basement is considered the most haunted area of the building, with reports of a former cook who committed suicide at this location. Staff have reported witnessing objects moving on their own. The historic hotel, which opened in 1911, is a staple of local ghost tours and has been subject to several paranormal investigations.

Trowbridge Falls:
Trowbridge Falls in Thunder Bay, Ontario, is widely considered by locals and paranormal investigators to be one of the most haunted places in the region. The forested trails and campground are the subject of several recurring ghost stories and unexplained phenomena. Common paranormal reports and legends associated with the area include Trowbridge Falls Woman in White. The Woman in White is a spectral female figure has been spotted floating across the park's open grass spaces. Some accounts claim she tells people to leave the area. Then we have The Undertaker. The Undertaker is an entity allegedly haunting the parking lot, known to peer through car windows and violently bangs on the windows of parked vehicles. A local legend tells of a shapeshifting creature (Dogman) that switches between human and animal form along the trails and near the waterfall. Some hikers have seen a Dogman creature, while other hikers have encountered the Deerman. The Deerman has antlers and a humanoid bipedal body. Campers, hunters have encountered the Phantom Runners. Hikers, hunters, campers have reported being aggressively shoved or pushed on the trails by unseen entities, as well as hearing the sounds of footsteps when no one is around. The main bridge leading into the campground is historically cited as an active hotspot for strange voices, feelings of dread, and the sounds of splashing (allegedly tied to past drowning victims in the river).

Silver Islet:
The former mining community of Silver Islet in Ontario, Canada, is widely considered one of the region's most famously haunted locations, with a history steeped in paranormal lore. The remote island, which once boasted the richest silver mine in the world before being flooded by Lake Superior in 1883, is frequently visited by paranormal investigators and paranormal enthusiasts. The most common reports include The Spectral Ship Captain. The Spectral Ship Captain is a ghostly figure of a ship captain that has been spotted for generations, mournfully peering out from the upper windows of the historic Silver Islet. Locals and visitors have reported seeing another "woman in white" roaming the General Store, walking down the main road, and even appearing on the nearby dock, as if waiting for a lost lover. As you can see there are two Women in White at Thunder Bay, you have the Trowbridge Falls Woman in White and then you have the Silver Islet Woman in White. Another ghost that haunts the Islet is the Stamp Mill Ghost. Dating back to the mining boom days, there are historical reports of a white-garbed figure stalking the docks and the watchtower of the old stamp mill. People camping or walking the area have reported hearing ghostly piano or concert music drifting across the water from when early miners held concerts on Sunday afternoons.

Alexander Henry Museum Ship:
This decommissioned Canadian Coast Guard icebreaker, permanently docked at the waterfront, is the source of many eerie tales, with visitors and crew reporting unexplained footsteps and shadowy presences in the wheelhouse. Tourists, locals have made claim that they have seen ghostly sailors on the ice breaker and have heard the words: "Prepare to tack!" "Ahoy!" and "Man Overboard!" Ontario Spectral Chasers have captured several EVPs while investigating the ice breaker. The group captured an EVP that said: "man overboard!"

HAUNTED TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Trinidad and Tobago is considered a hotspot for the paranormal, heavily rooted in Afro-Caribbean folklore, Amerindian legends, and deep colonial history. Locals widely believe in duppies (wandering spirits of the dead), shapeshifters, and haunted locations across both islands. My ex-brother-in-law Mike McDaniels spent a few days on Trinidad and Tobago and claims he saw ghostly African slaves wandering around the beach areas.

Specific haunted sites and legends include:

- Chacachacare Island: This uninhabited island off the northwest coast of Trinidad houses an abandoned 1920s leper colony, a convent, and a cemetery. It is a legendary site for ghost stories, including sightings of a nun carrying a lantern and sightings of phantom men appearing inside the old doctors' quarters.
- The Valencia Stretch: This is a notorious stretch of road on the way to the east coast of Trinidad. Local consensus indicates that a mysterious single light appears at night, pacing drivers before vanishing into the bush—allegedly leading those who follow it to crash.

- Tobago's Silk Cotton Trees: In Tobagonian lore, large, centuries-old silk cotton trees are believed to be home to angry spirits or jumbies. Many of these trees date back to the plantation era, making them focal points for ancestral spirits and resisting enslaved Africans.
- Solomon Hochoy Highway Statue: Consensus among users on the Reddit Trinidad and Tobago Community confirms legends surrounding the highway statue near Claxton Bay, where the spirit of the woman it represents is said to cross the highway at night.
